HOW TO SAVE A LIFE—THE HARD WAY!

THE GUY WHO GOES UNDER FOR THE SECOND TIME CAN'T WAIT UNTIL YOU GO HOME AND GET YOUR WATER WINGS, AND EVEN IF YOUR TROUSERS GET RIPPED CLIMBING THE RESERVOIR FENCE YOU'LL MAKE THE BEST OF EVEN THAT EMBARRASSING SITUATION IF YOU'RE A REAL HERO! WHICH ONE OF THESE RESCUE INCIDENTS IS YOUR FAVORITE?

ACCIDENTAL REUNION

A two-year-old became the hoppiest boy in England in 1951, and his pal, Rover, the luckiest dog. When Rover ran away from his home in Oldham, he was picked up by the S.P.C.A. On the day he was headed for the gas chamber, because no one claimed him, the manager of a theatrical company called the S.P.C.A. He needed a dog for a play he was producing and wondered if he could borrow one for a few days. Rover got the job. As fate would have it, the boy's mother happened to attend the last performance of the play, recognized Rover in the cost, and saved him from the gas chamber by carrying him home when the curtain went down on his brief theatrical career.

JOHNNY ON THE SPOT

In December 1952, a Detroit resident was racing through congested traffic with his wife only minutes away from becoming a mother. He swung his car wildly and smacked into an oncoming car. Angry motorists piled up behind the accident and madly tooted their horns. The father-to-be was indeed a confused and excited man, but there was no need for it. He unexpectedly got assistance from the two women whose car he had hit. The occupants, a mother and a daughter, were both registered nurses. They went to work and safely delivered his wife of a six-pound baby boy.

A FAMILY AFFAIR

A Waltham, Mass. man couldn't recognize the boy struggling in the Charles River near an upturned canoe, but he promptly dived into the river anyway. As he swam closer he was amazed to hear the cry "Save me, Dad!" He had saved his own son!

BELATED REWARD

In 1925 a New York businessman fell in front of a truck at a busy Boston intersection, and was pulled to safety by a woman passerby. Grateful for the timely rescue, the New Yorker took the woman's name and address, after promising to reward her in the near future. As the years rolled by however, nothing happened and the woman soon dismissed the incident from her mind. After ten years had passed, the woman, now a resident of Saugus, Mass., one day received a letter from a New York attorney. It advised her that the man whose life she had once saved had just died, and in his will he had left her the sum of $1,000.

THE FLAMING RESCUE

As a fireman was carrying a woman down a ladder from a burning building in Detroit in 1947, they passed a first floor window. Flames shot out and nipped the fire fighter in the seat of his pants. He yelped, spanked himself frantically, and released his hold on the woman he was saving. The fireman then lost his balance and landed smack on the lady who had already preceded him to the ground. The woman rubbed her bruised body while listening to her rescuer's words of apology.

BY REMOTE CONTROL

In Poland, near the German frontier, the son of a Polish school teacher was busy operating a four-dollar home-made radio set, when his ears caught a faint sound. It was a message which said. "Soviet ship Leno calling! Help! Sinking off Sakhalin!" To the Polish youth the words were incredible for the Pacific island of Sakhalin in the sea of Okhotsk was located almost 6,000 miles away. The lad jumped to his feet, ran to the nearest telephone and called the authorities at the largest town in the vicinity. They in turn telephoned Warsaw. Within three minutes Warsaw had Moscow on the phone.

The amazing result was that twenty minutes later a lifeboat crew had put out in the icy waters of the Sea of Okhotsk and reached the spot a few bare minutes before the vessel sank. A crew of twenty men from the Lena were saved. A few days later the amateur operator of the four-dollar set received a medal specially bestowed on him by the Soviet Government.

SAVED BY MISTAKE

A screaming siren and a policeman's hunch were accredited with preventing a suicide in Washington, D. C. When the officer saw a speeding prowler car he thought it was heading toward Calvert Street bridge, the scene of many suicidal leaps. He commandeered an automobile and raced to the bridge. No prowler car was to be seen, but he did notice a man take off his coat and throw one leg over the bridge railing. The policeman jumped from the car and pulled the man back to safety. The prowler car? It was racing to the scene of another accident.

TWICE SAVED. Many years ago a wealthy family in England took their children for a holiday in the country. Their host turned over his estate to them for the week-end. During this time the children went swimming in the pool. One of the boys started to drown, and the other boys screamed for help. The son of the gardener jumped into the water and rescued the boy. Later, the grateful parents asked the gardener what they could do for the young hero, and were told that the boy had ambitions to go to college some day and become a doctor. The visitors thereupon offered to pay for his college education.

AWARD
DIPLOMA

When Winston Churchill became stricken with pneumonia after the Teheran Conference, the King of England called upon Dr. Alexander Fleming, the developer of penicillin, to save the Prime Minister. For the second time in his life Churchill became indebted to the doctor. It was Fleming who had saved Churchill from drowning in the pool when he was a child.
